ATDP researchers and their colleagues have reported their findings at conferences across the country (and occasionally in Canada). Below is a list of the topics that they have presented, most of which explore the characteristics of academically talented students. Like the peer-reviewed articles, the most recent entries appear first.

• Worrell, F. C. (2005, August). Attitudes toward cheating and perfectionism in academically talented students. In J. Gorgia (Chair), Unwanted gifts: Roadblocks to success in developing academic/artistic giftedness. Symposium at the annual meeting of the American Psychological Association, Washington, DC.
